The Tribune Fire.

The large two-story frame residence of John Trainer, county superintendent of schools, at the corner of North College and Green streets, caught fire in some unknown manner last evening, and the building was destroyed entailing a loss of over $1,000. The fire was discovered early in the morning, and the fire department turned out of doors and soon put it out. The fire was not so much of a change of heart. In the south we had been led to think. He wanted to caught and tucked, and made believe that every body was a hero that treason should be paid by death and loyalty rewarded with victory. What did man fight for? Was it the miserable pittance of $1 a month? Was it a little money that men won into the war and stood up to be a target for? Never could the reason be brought down to this—but nothing but loyalty to principle could have made men leave their homes, their families and all, to bear their breasts to bullets and fight these infernal rebels. These reunions make us better, he said. Look at the men who met in the court house to-day: "How are you, old boy? why, good God, we've seen you for twenty years, and they the same now, and they're as fresh as they shake again. This is a grand sight. I tell you, Governor, (turning to him), we've got a little closer together at these reunions than anyone else under heaven. We think more of each other than ever before, and we have had enough, God knows, to bind us together—so that nothing under the sun shall divide us; and in the name of God, in the name of the Union, we'll stand together to the last man down during the war, and in the names of our children and our homes and our country, let us continue to stand together. (Applause). Now you have come here to attend another day's reunion. I attended one last week, and I have not got well yet. I was so glad when I got home that I left her kissing my wife. She asked me what was the matter, (laughing) and said, 'Why, you come home like you have been to camp meeting,' and said I always came home from these reunions a better man, than when I went away. And I honestly believe, in the sight of God to-night, that we are better men for attending these reunions. When we are all patriotic comrades meet, and their ties are such as t

BIG DAY OF THE REUNION.

Imposing Parade of the Survivors of the Late War.

THE MARCH TO CAMP SHERIDAN.

A Rousing Time Last Night—Stirring Speeches by Governor Ogleby and General Pavey.

The size of the old soldiers' reunion numerically exceeds the expectations of the committee. Over 2500 of the boys in blue, decked out with corps and regimental badges are here, and most of them will remain over until to-morrow. Heartfelt greetings and hand-shakings are general, while a taste of army life in tents is had at beautiful Camp Sheridan. The streets are thronged with city people and visitors to-day to witness the parade, and as the weather is fine and everybody in good spirits, the reunion may be put down as a big success.

SPECHES BY OGLEBY AND PAVEY.

To accommodate the crowd, it was decided to have the address delivered last night in the city park. It was a crowd of monster size that gathered about the stand while Goodman's band played several patriotic airs.

The first speaker was the first colonel of the old 8th, Governor R. J. Ogleby, who was happily presented to the cheering multitude by Ald. L. F. Muzy.

Gov. Ogleby spoke to the vast audience for upward of an hour, addressing his remarks to the Mayor of the city of Decatur, and Comrades with their Regiments and Companys of Infantry, Cavalry, Artillery, Engineers Corps—and the Immortal Brigade. He opened his remarks by saying: "I don't know when I wanted to say you were, and I don't know when, in my life, I could see less of you than you are to-night. I take it that you have very great interest in the cause for which you voted, coming as many of you do from remote towns and states, some of you with your families, to stay days and nights away from home. It is more than an ordinary motive to lead you to do this. Why is it? There are no comrades here to night who feel they have no higher place to go to, and you could never have had a better place to go to. The reason is that it is to have a good government in power, and follow our daily occupations, and hope to see the government perpetuated—but in addition to these feelings, the soldier has another experience—he has what he cannot impart to any living man. You see the soldier ordinary as he is in his every day work. It is difficult for the ordinary citizen to believe that man was once a soldier who for almost a quarter of a century had been a citizen. The common eye cannot get hold of the soldier's experience—but on the other hand, when you meet these men, especially to celebrate their experience, and talk them over, you get a little bit of insight into that mysterious feeling which the soldier experiences, it is uncommunicable. You may talk about it until your tongue are weary, and until you weary the man you talk to, but there is something about a soldier's life—it means a soldier's experience in time of war, in the field of actual duty, in the campaigns of war, on the march, and in the actual experiences of any life, that is unlike any other in a world.

The Governor spoke about the results of the war—that we were holding watchful by every nation in the world, and that we must not let the spirit of the war, and there are many of the leading men and nations who seriously doubt our capacity for civil government and self-preservation, who doubt we can have such a civil war and survive. They have had something to judge by: Germany and France particularly had a large hold to judge by in the experience of Great Britain and France, and remember the terrible civil war at the hands of the English and the British government established in the year 1660, after the battle at Hastings, how many serious conflicts there were between the rights of the people and the rights of the crown, and hence they stood in great unison over the civil war, and he said: "You can't sacrifice the rights of the people and nation's who seriously doubt our capacity for civil government and self-preservation, who doubt we can have such a civil war and survive.
